

Cuerdas Y Fuego

Fabio Furia, bandoneón soloist
String-Orchestra

THE SHOW

Cuerda y Fueye

The first piece of the concert already reveals in the title the staff to which all the compositions in the program are intended.

In Spanish, the strings are called “cuerdas” and the bandoneon in the Porteño jargon is given the name of its beating heart, that is, Fueye, bellows.

Alejandro Schwarz | Cuerdas y Fueye (2009)

It is a composition by Alejandro Schwarz from 2009 that explores and highlights the lyrical and rhythmic possibilities of the bandoneon in a captivating dialogue with the string orchestra.

Gustavo Beytelmann | Clasico y Moderno (2010)

It is a composition by Gustavo Beytelmann, a great Argentine composer, who can be defined as an heir of the Piazzolla tradition. A tradition that Beytelmann has brought even closer to the borders of European avant-garde music. Contrapuntal traits of great mastery can in fact be recognized with decidedly daring harmonizations without ever losing the roots and the intelligibility that allows it to conquer all audiences.

Alejandro Schwarz | Un largo camino (2010)

THE SHOW

Cuerda Y Fuego

This suite of 4 compositions traces and ideally tells the history of tango in some of its fundamental stages.

Despertar (the awakening)

Tango was a very successful genre from the 1920s to the 1950s, then it had a slow decline until the 1980s when, thanks to the music of Astor Piazzolla and some great dance performances success, the giant has awakened conquering and involving an ever wider audience up to the present day when the expansion is now global. The piece celebrates and recounts this awakening.

Guardia Vieja (the old guard)

This term indicates the first musicians who play and write the first tangos, we are in the early 1900s and Buenos Aires is like an alchemist's laboratory in which the elements are mixed giving life to a new material that will later be called Tango. It is no coincidence that the song is not a tango but a "milonga", an older dance that is said to be the mother of Tango.

Los '50

From the early 1900s we move on to the 1950s when the tango had already gone through various eras, "The vieja guard", "The new guard", "The golden age". The most evolved popular music in the world is becoming even more sophisticated, the ensembles are becoming smaller and smaller, from the large "typical orchestras" which counted between 13 and 20 elements, it is now time for quintets, quartets, trios.

Music incorporates elements of contemporaneity: jazz comes from the United States and conditions harmonizations and structures, research now becomes one of the dominant elements.

Contemporary

We come to the present day, tango has taken on various forms, as many as there are composers. Also in this case, as in all art, contemporaneity is not expressed in a single language but everyone conducts research that testifies to the great vitality and momentum that the tango phenomenon will bring to the generations to come.
